Taylor, J.H. "editor by". The Golfer's Record of Games. London: Dow and Low, 16mo - over 5 $\frac{3}{4}$ " - 6 $\frac{3}{4}$ " tall. Hard Cover. Inscribed By Author. Very Good n.d. circa 1920 100pp Taylor writes the introduction "The marvellous spread of the game of Golf during the last decade, and the multitude of Links that are now to be found scattered up and down the country, are responsible for the migratory habits of the modern Golfer. He is not content to confine his prowess to his own particular district, but rather is he inclined to wander further afield in order to test the possibilities of different courses, and by so doing to improve and consolidate his stock of playing knowledge, for it has passed into a truism that nothing improves one's game more than playing over different courses, which has the effect of expanding the player's golfing intellect of how the various strokes should be played under the manifold conditions of wind, weather, and environment. This multiplicity of Links, proving as it does the strongest possible evidence in favour of the healthiness of the game, yet has its drawbacks to the Golfer of wandering tendencies, inasmuch as it is impossible for him to carry in his mind the peculiarities and subtleties of its own that every course undoubtedly possesses in the way that the hazards are placed, the state of the greens and of the many and one things that strike the eye on the occasion of a first visit. In this little Book the golfing public can make such memoranda at the time. which may be referred to again whenever necessary, thereby fortifying the player against the dangers and troubles that lie ahead of him, and which must be encountered during the progress of the game. For this reason I hope the Book will be acceptable. and also prove a pleasing record of games that have been played. J. H. TAYLOR" Also a page of "dont's" very good condition.

Taylor has also signed the book after the introduction, this is an original signature not a print. Further image £250.00

Golfer Henry Cotton's silver plated ink pad and stamps

Price: $565.00

Ref: 17930
Henry Cotton Golf Club, Sotto Grande. Henry Cotton's silver plated ink pad and stamps. The handle on the pad and one stamp is in the form of an owl. The stamp says 'Henry Cotton, New Club, Sotto Grande,(Cadiz), Spain'. Henry Cotton (Thomas Henry Cotton), 1907-87, was born in Cheshire, England. In his early years Cotton was a very good cricketer until he was banned from playing as a punishment, and then so switch to playing golf. He turned professional in 1924 at the age of 17, but only received international recognition when he won the British Open in 1934. He went on to win the Open again in 1937 and 1948. Cotton played in the Ryder Cup tournaments and was twice captain, he also won three British PGA crowns as well as many European Championships. He would have undeniably won more if it were not for World War II in which Cotton served in the RAF. During the time he and other pro's organised exhibition matches to raise funds for the Red Cross, this earned him an M.B.E. In his later years, Cotton retired and became a course designer, journalist and writer, and wrote ten books. He founded the Golf Foundation, which helped thousands of young boys and girls get started in golf. He designed the Penia course in the Algarve, Portugal and spent his last years living there. In recognition of his contribution to British golf, the R&A awarded him honorary membership in 1968 and he was knighted, becoming Sir Henry Cotton, in 1987 shortly before his death.
